As we approach the mid-way point of the semester, this journal will call on you to reflect on the progress of the course and your Final Report so far. You are tasked with the role of completing a journal which discusses and responds to the following 5 questions:

- 1) How did you begin your report? What was your starting point? How did this help you begin progress for your report?
- 2) Reflect on the research process and how you have found this portion of the project to be. Have you enjoyed the researching period? Have you struggled to find sources or did you have a wide array of research available to you? How has the course structure and content supported the research process?
- 3) What new information have you uncovered about your topic that you were surprised to discover? Why was this surprising? Will this be helpful for your discussion and recommendation, or will it change the track and scope of the report?
- 4) What new questions/thought processes, if any, have you developed on your topic that you plan to evaluate further since you initially began the research?
- 5) A) If you are working in a group, how are the group dynamics evolving? What have you learned about group work – either positive or negative? How has working in a group, and how have your group members, added value to the report process?
B) If you are working individually, what have you learned about your own work processes? What valuable takeaways will help you grow individually on future assignments?

Please be sure to complete your journal in complete sentences with structured paragraphs. As always, be cautious of spelling and grammar.

A reminder that if you are working in a group, only one submission is required.
